Erin Ko

Erin Ko is a visual artist currently based in New York. She combines traditional art making methods with new media tools to address our complicated love/hate relationship with technology. Landry Major

Visions of the American West have long been a part of our culture, but the narrative surrounding cowboys and the family-run ranch is fast disappearing. In this project, Los Angeles-based photographer Landry Major captures the essence of the true American West before it's gone. Landry has won numerous awards for her photos, among them Lurzer's Archive: Best Advertising Photographies Worldwide. See more of Landry's work here.

Jaime Derringer

Jaime Derringer is a self-taught artist who finds inspiration in Japanese calligraphy (Shodo), graphics and style from the 80s and 90s, electronic music, science fiction, undersea creatures, and architecture. Her work is an exploration of shape and color, using layering as a guide. Everything is unplanned and completely intuitive—each mark is a response to its predecessor. Bridgette Duran

Abstract painter Bridgette Duran graduated from the Fashion Institute for Design and Merchandising (FIDM) in Los Angeles and worked in fashion and interior design before discovering her natural talent for painting.
